Earon Davenport said the country could not go on as it had been in-definitely and maintain financial sol-The Marquis of Crewe, lord president of the council, who replied said that the main bulk of the expenditure was on account of the importation of munitions and loans to the allies and

Lord Peel, in support of his motion said that the figures which were given as to the expenditure on war and civil establishments for a full year approached very nearly a total aggregate amount of the income of the nation.

He doubted whether the governmen was sufficiently serious in enforcing economy. The government had acted only half heartedly in restricting the excess of imports, and while advising the mation to practice economy, there was no evidence that the government was setting an example in economy, Lord Davonport thought it likely
